'LSD Temple' to Be Established Here

By LARI BLUMENFELD

A house on Queens Road owned by head acid "head" Dr. Timothy Leary will be turned into an LSD temple, the Gazette learned last night from Charlie "Brown" Artman, who will head the heads at the temple.

Artman told the Gazette yesterday Leary gave his sanction for the sanctuary during his recent "happening" in San Francisco.

"Charlie, who will conduct the religious rites with a partner, Michel Mohle, will open the temple with eight "seekers after the way." Artman and Mohle will be considered the "guardians," he said.

"Timothy Leary is the most beautiful man incarnated on this planet," Charlie said, "Lord Buddha has returned to guide the people up out of the darkness."

Artman said Leary has "decoded what is contained in the cellular memory and communicated it" to believers.

He said everyone knows the truth in his cellular memory, but is not aware of it until he "turns on" with acid.

"Guardian" Artman dropped more than acid talk while visiting the Gazette office. He brought his bride — or soon-to-be-bride — Chiron Khanshendel, 18, whom he has known for "thousands of years."

Charlies said he will manufacture, LSD at the temple because it has to be made by "someone pure."

Needs 'Right Vibration'

"I wouldn't use LSD in a religious ceremony that had been bought on the black market," he said. "It wouldn't have the right vibrations."

The well-known Berkeley personality, who will file papers today for his City Council candidacy, said he doesn't expect the temple to be raided.

"We will extend an open invitation to everyone — including narcotic and other agents — so they can see what we're doing and tune in and turn on with us."

Artman had high praise for Police Chief William Beall and City Attorney Robert Anderson both of whom, he said, were "helpful" and gave him advice about setting up the temple.

"They directed me to Assistant District Attorney David Dutton," he said.

His answer to the project was: "Don't do it in Berkeley!"

Artman said Dutton "can't fool around with the highest powers in the universe," and that his "day of reckoning is coming sooner than he thinks."

Temple "turning on" might be busted, he finally admitted, and he plans a test case — himself.

"I won't be a martyr, though," he said, "because I will win. I have spiritual guidance."

Meanwhile, Charlie and his friends including Chiron, his demure but not-so-blushing bride; Lena Fish, 20, and J.C. Baily, will leave today for New Orleans where they will attend the colorful Mardi Gras celebration.

The foursome has acquired a beat-up panel truck — "with a spirit and soul" — given to Charlie by a "prophet now jailed in Salt Lake City for possession of marijuana."

The mobile temple has living accommodations, bells that ring, incense burners, "god's eyes," and the African mask given to Charlie by his mother.

They will travel through Indian reservations — one will be chosen for Chiron's and Charlie's earthly wedding — and bring back a bushel of peyote.

Charlie's parting salvo was: "Remind all the Berkeley hippies to register by Feb. 9 — legal or otherwise — so they can vote for me in April."

The Wrong Place For LSD 'Temple'

Generally speaking Charlie "Brown" Artman is a harmless eccentric who flits about town on his bicycle with his cape and beard whipping in the wind.

His avowed dedication to drugs may be real or imaginary, but by himself he is no menace to society.

But Artman becomes a problem if he establishes an LSD "temple" in the 1200 block of Queens Road in a house reportedly owned by "acid head" oracle Timothy Leary.

That residence is just a hop skip and a jump from the Queens-Fairlawn playground.

Artman alone may be no serious threat, but if the temple is established and if it attracts, as it must, the Telegraph Ave. types intent on taking a trip, then it has no place in a quiet residential neighborhood.

Ginsburg to separate wheat and chaff

Timothy Leary visited Western last February and his appeal was immediate and general. Many were so enamored with the bizarre antics of that mad man wearing the funny neckties and white pajamas that they overlooked the message in favor of the medium.

Next Thursday at 8 p. m. in the Auditorium the Associated Students will provide another opportunity to separate the wheat from the chaff when Allen Ginsburg, the emphatic "Father of the Beat Generation," will perform in an hour long celebration of poetry and Hindu chanting.

During the early post-war years Ginsburg studied at Columbia University where he met his prose counterparts Jack Kerouac. Together with men like William Burroughs, he described the horrors of drug addiction in his novel, "Naked Lunch," and Gary Snyder, poet and Zen master; Ginsburg shared a place at the nucleus of the Beat movement.

After several years of knocking about the country, Ginsburg established himself in New York's Greenwich Village and the North Beach district of San Francisco. "His first book of poetry entitled "Howl and Other Poems," was published in 1956 receiving national attention when censors banned its sale on grounds that it was "lewd and obscene." At the conclusion of a series of court battles, "Howl" was released for public consumption and has since sold over 125,000 copies, including distribution in many foreign countries.

Ginsburg has not limited himself to literary forays against the Establishment. He has given his outspoken endorsement for the legalization of marijuana and LSD, and calls for more humane methods in the treatment of heroine addicts. As an avowed anarchist he spurns the authoritarian strictures of government and is often at the head of demonstrations protesting the Viet Nam war.

In 1962 he picketed the Sheraton Place in San Francisco which Madame Nhu, the widow of Vietnamese Premier had been using as home base while encouraging U.S. involvement in her country. Ginsburg paraded ed back and forth on the sidewalk outside carrying a placard on which he had scrawled a spontaneous poem.

When asked he reason for his protest, Ginsberg exclaimed from behind a forest of beard, that he was there not to deny Madame Nhu but to convince her that love and human warmth could end her hostile attitudes. "She needs someone to make love to her," he said.

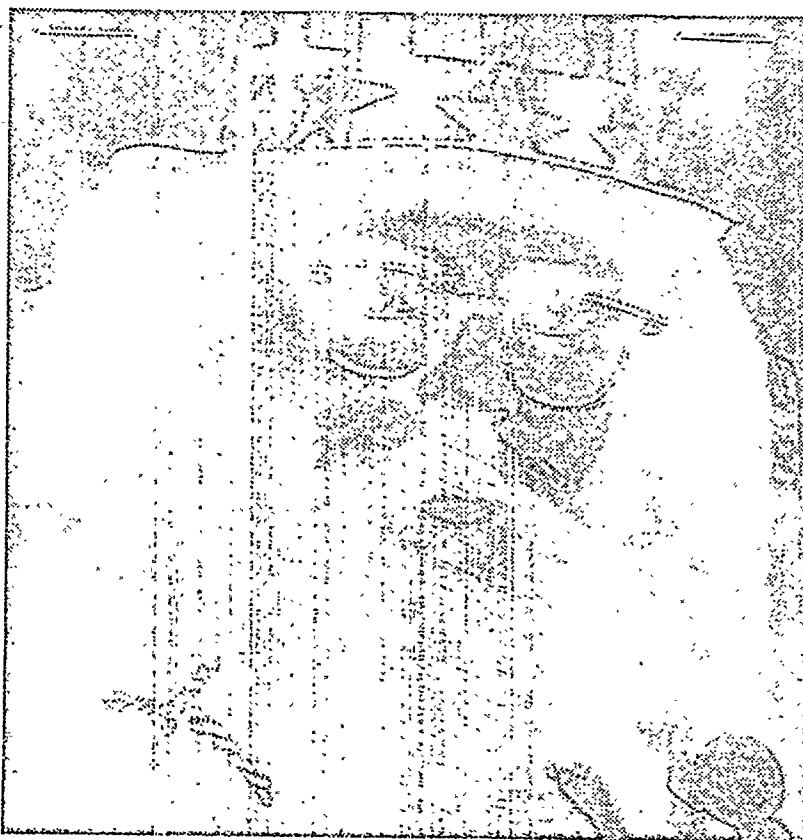

And that is the real meat of the "Amour Vincet Omnes, Love Conquers All, through all the universes." For as long as he has been the Prince of Beatitude it has been a perpetual cascade of love, love, love. The hippies didn't innovate the "Love Conspiracy;" it was Ginsberg when he confounded the cruel nightsticks of the cops with his huge wet kisses.

Ginsberg's unorthodox views and his awesome appearance have fooled some into the notion that he is merely the archetype beatnik and a dabbler in the arts. That, of course, is not so. He has traveled throughout Europe and India as a Guggenheim Fellow, reading his poetry, lecturing and making a diligent study of Hindu and Taoist philosophies.

In the U. S. he is a respected discussant on issues of social and scientific importance. Recently the University of California at Berkeley extended to him an offer as guest lecturer for the coming year.

At 11 Ginsberg has joined forces with Alan Watts, Tim Leary, Gary Snyder and others in laying groundwork for the preservation of the expanding hippie subculture. He also continues to stand as an important force in American poetry, following in the Romantic and visionary traditions of Blake and Whitman.

Leary Calls Use of Drugs 'Revolutionary'; Says They Liberate People from Society

By ALISON FARLEY

Dr. Timothy Leary is back in town. He's here to "groove in the place I've lived in for 20 years," and, at the same time, give benefit lectures at Berkeley's Free University (FUB).

In an interview at the FUB, Dr. Leary spoke of the power of psychedelic drugs.

"A dove-tailed joint is more revolutionary than all the Molotov cocktails ever thrown. The act of turning on is in itself anti-establishment."

"Drugs free you from any control; you can literally make up your mind to pick the social system you want, be it the political, the farm, or whatever."

"Drugs demand that you take a position," he went on. "They anarchize the nervous system. To drop out is not to cop out, but to free yourself from exterior control. You become a god of yourself."

Is the inner peacefulness of drugs incongruous to the active revolutionary movement? "No," he said. "You must feel good within yourself before you can do anything. Turning on is not an escape."

Dressed in a sweater, corduroy pants, sailing tennies and a lone string of beads, Dr. Leary seemed glad to be back in Berkeley. Unfortunately, he must soon leave again, to appeal four charges of marijuana possession that could imprison him for 79 years.

Does being arrested discourage him from his beliefs? "It doesn't affect my consciousness. If this country is so up tight to arrest me for an ounce of grass, it would probably arrest me for any reason," he said. "I am an advocate of personal pleasure, and it can't stand that," he added.

Personal pleasure is the key to a happy existence, he explained, and the first step to pleasure is psychedelic drugs. Not amphetamines, heroin, or alcohol, he was quick to add. "They enslave you as much as the Establishment."

Psychedelic drugs make it possible for a "silent majority" of persons, under 25 to quietly make love, be peaceful and yet overthrow the present system from within."

He cited the young advisory staff of the late Senator Robert Kennedy, who influenced Kennedy with their pacifist ideas, and also the unknown people, who choose to be politically involved but to live quietly on farms and in the country, yet who are creating a new social structure.

With a sincere, intense expression he announced that his "great revelatory powers have foreseen in 10 to 15 years the arrival of a Dope Society, to replace the Booze Society. The Dope Society will be better, because there will be no fighting. Drugs are psychologically more pacific than alcohol," he said.

This society is not the ultimate in happiness, though, Leary explained. "We are riding a pendulum swing, away from 2000 years of sexual repression and Puritanism."

The pendulum will swing backwards, to a "Turn-Off," but it will be a much higher level than before." Smiling, he remarked: "Perhaps I'll be the leader of the next, too. Who knows?"

He was asked if happiness brings boredom. Aren't many dope-users bored with life? "Boredom is a great evolutionary cause, but a child of 14 is bored with TV, not with LSD. Boredom is a challenge to change your life. The more godlike you become, the more bored you are."

LSD is the antidote to boredom," Leary answered.

The questioning continued. What about drugs and violence? Aren't the Hell's Angels heavy acid-eaters? "Yes, but I don't know enough about them to discuss it. They also take speed, alcohol and pills, the violence could be a combined effect of all these agents."

By and large, violent people shun psychedelic drugs. The number of violent acts committed under these drugs is miraculously low, considering the unstableness of people," he explained.

With his long grey-streaked hair and handsome features radiating happiness, he said: "It's better to turn on with anything you do, be it the Army or business college."

Continuing, he said, "It is best to go back to the tribal way of life, away from the computer and the military."

"With tribes," Leary stated, "there is respect for one another. If the Black nationalists don't hassle me, I leave them alone. As man gets more free, he respects the freedom of others more."

In a final word of advice, Leary warned that "state-supported universities must stop. Free universities are the seed of the future. That is why I am giving these benefit lectures, to strengthen the one here (the FUB)."

As he turned to go, he sighed. "You know, being God isn't all pleasure. It's a lot of responsibility and the pay isn't very good."

"Psychedelic drugs are the most powerful revolutionary agents discovered by man. The Establishment should be having nightmares about them."

Timothy Leary Escapes --Prison Uniform Found

San Luis Obispo

Dr. Timothy Leary, a sort of a guru to the turn-on society, was the object of a wide search yesterday after he dropped out of the California Men's Colony west of here.

The drug-promoting former Harvard faculty member was missing when guards at the minimum security prison on Highway 1 made their routine midnight bed-check.

Authorities had just one clue to work on: Leary's blue denim prison clothing and one of his socks were found yesterday morning in the men's room of a service station in south San Luis Obispo — some four miles east of the prison.

A spokesman for the men's colony said Leary, a husky six-footer, had to scale a 12-foot-high chain link fence topped by barbed wire to make his escape.

FRIEND

It is assumed that he was met somewhere outside the prison by a friend who had a car and a change of clothing.

Beyond that, the spokesman said, prison officials had no idea where Leary was heading — or what his motives were.

The 49-year-old crusader for legalization of LSD and marijuana was serving a six-month to ten-year term for possession of marijuana.

He was arrested on Dec.

TIMOTHY LEARY
Missing at bed-check

26, 1968, in Laguna Beach along with his wife, Rosemary, 34, (who drew five years on probation) and his son, John, 20, (who served three months in jail).

Just last month Leary appeared before the California Adult Authority, seeking a parole. But, his case was put over for a year.

APPEAL

Four patrol cars of two guards each were fanned out on patrols of county roads in the area soon after Leary's escape was detected. Escape bulletins were circulated statewide.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation was notified because Leary is currently appealing a Federal Court decision involving his ten-year sentence for illegally importing marijuana across the Mexican Border at Laredo, Tex., in 1965.

Leary won a reversal following his first trial on that charge, but drew the ten-year sentence following a second trial.

Leary also was scheduled to begin trial Thursday in Dutchess County, N.Y., on 11 counts of drug-law violations in 1965 and 1967.

Until his prison clothing was found at the service station here, authorities had speculated Leary might have gone from the prison — on a hill near Highway 1, overlooking the ocean — to one of the many coastal clusters of drug-oriented hippie types who consider him a folk hero.

Leary had been working in the clerical pool at the men's colony.
